A Good Storry.—Florence, the commedian, tells a capital story of a waiter at one of the London taverns who was strongly given to drink. A party of young men determined to reform him, and one day read an imaginary paragraph from the paper relating a terrible accident, in which an inebriate, in blowing out a candle, was killed by the flame igniting with the fumes of his breath. Jerry pricked up his ears at this, and requested that the paragraph might be read to him again, which was done, to the evident horror of the poor man, who immediately went in search of the cook to borrow a prayer-book. Returning with this, he expressed a desire to take a solemn oath upon it, bemoaned the fact that he had been a sorry tippler and was bringing himself to ruin, and then swore that never again, so long as he lived, would he attempt to blow out a candle.

A mechanic rejoicing in the name of Dubois, and a resident of the city of Detroit, took to drinking and was speedily transformed from a hard working man into a drunken sot. arrived home and found that his wife and his coat had changed places—the latter lay on the floor, and the former was suspended from the hook. Up rushed Dubois to the rescue, took his wife down, and after much labor brought her to her senses. The attempt at suicide completely sobered him, and like Obadiah Oldbuck, he him, and like Obadish Oldbuck, he turned over a new leaf. He promised never to drink again, and probably would have kept his word if his wife had been able to keep her own counsel. But she was just smart enough to inform several of her neighbors that the apparent hanging was a putup job, the rope being tied under her arms. The knowledge of this little practical joke coming to Dubois' ears, he first thrashed the whole family, then performed some extraordinary feats of furniture-smashing, and finally left the premises, and has not been seen since.

SAM JOHNSON.

Sam Johnson was a negro financier

Sam Johnson was a negro financier in New Orleans in the earlier and purer days of the Republic. The following is given in Beecher's Christian Union, as illustrating the immitativeness of the darkey; Sam was a great authority on the levee; and one day he called his satellites together and addressed them on the importance of adopting a fiscal policy more nearly resembling that which had raised to opulence their Caucasian neighbors.

You must have a bank. Dats de way de white folks does."

These words fell on a propitious soil. The project went into swift execution and the earnings of the week were promptly forthcoming.

"Niggers" says Sam, "I'll be de cashier; you must 'posit de money wid me, and when you want any you must draw into it. Dat's de way de white folks does."

All went merrily for a while, and the depositors were highly elated about "de bank." But by and by there began to be trouble, not with the deposits, but the drafts. It was found easier to get funds into this model institution than to get them out again, and Sam was compelled to face the angry customers, and explain.

"It's all right," says he, "de bauk's only s'pended, and in a few days she will "again resume;" dat's de way de white folks does."

This expedient lasted but a little while, however. Suspicions of foul play day by day increased, and the storm was about to burst on the head of the great operator, when he found it expedient to gather once more his infuriated depositors and "face the music" frankly.

These Lamps are so constructed that they can not be exploded by the use of the most inflamable oils, and are absolutely as safe as a candle. They give a very soft, brilliant, steady light, and use one-third leas oil for a given amount of light, than any other lamp. The absence or odor, even when turned down low, makes them very desirable for a sick-room, or night lamp. Being made of metal, they will not break. Glass lamps are dangerous; they will explode or break, destroying life and property; they easily get out of order; give a poor light, a bad odor, and are especially dangerous in the hands of children or careless servants. While any of the light oifs—bennine, gasoline, &c., can be burned in these lamps with perfect safely, there is no economy in using them, as good Carbon Oil of the Legal standard, 110s fire test, will burn much longer and is much more safe to keep about the hones.
